KAMEHAMEHA I.

Of All Organizations Of

The United States Army In Oahu, T. H.

1911

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF HONOLULU.

INTRODUCTORY

THE DISTRICT OF HAWAII was created by General Orders No. 183, War Department, September 30, 1910. It was designated as "All that portion of the Department of California that is embraced in the Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies."

Pursuant to the foregoing order, Colonel Walter S. Schuyler, Fifth Cavalry, the senior line officer present, assumed command of the district on October 25, 1910, headquarters being established at Schofield Barracks, H. T. At the same time, Captain Edward A. Sturges, Fifth Cavalry, was designated to act as Adjutant General (G. O. 1, H. D. of H., October 25, 1910).

Colonel Schuyler relinquished command on December 6, 1910, in G. O. 2, H. D. of H., and on the same date Lieutenant-Colonel Homer W. Wheeler, Fifth Cavalry, assumed command (G. O. 3, H. D. H., December 6, 1910). On January 12, Lieutenant-Colonel Wheeler relinquished command (G. O. 1, H. D. H., 1911).

HAWAIIANS PREPARING FOR A LUAU (FEAST).

Special Orders No. 269, Par. 8, War Department, November 16, 1910, assigned Brigadier General Montgomery M. Macomb U. S. Army, to command of the District, and directed him to proceed to Honolulu and report to the Commanding General, Department of California.

Pursuant to said order, General Macomb assumed command on January 12, 1911, with Headquarters at Schofield Barracks (G. O. 2, H. D. H., January 12, 1911).

STAFF.

Captain Edward A. Sturges, Fifth Cavalry, appointed Acting Adjutant General by G. O. 1, H. D. H., October 25, 1910.

Second Lieutenant Frank M. Andrews, Eighth Cavalry, was designated as aide-de-camp from January 2, 1911, per G. O. 2 H. D. H., January 12, 1911.

INTRODUCTORY

Major Archibald Campbell, Adjutant-General (C. A. C.), reported for duty as Adjutant-General of the District on April 12, 1911, under authority of par. 17, S. O. 299, War Department, December 22, 1910, amended by par. 30, S. O. 68, War Department, 1911.

Captain C. C. Carter, General Staff (C. A. C.), reported for duty as Chief of Staff on March 30, 1911, under authority of S. O. 22, par 7, C. S. War Department. From date of arrival to April 12, 1911, Captain Carter was Acting Adjutant-General of the District.

Headquarters of the District were removed from Schofield Barracks on March 31, 1911, and established in the Alexander Young Hotel in the City of Honolulu. Four rooms are so occupied.

Major James M. Kennedy, M. C., was, by Gen. Orders No. 3, current series, these headquarters, appointed Chief Surgeon of the District, in addition to his other duties.

In the same order, First Lieutenant Joseph L. Sanford, M. R. C., U. S. A., was appointed Sanitary Inspector of the District.

Major Alexander M. Davis, Subsistence Department, Depot Commissary.

Captain Clyffard Game, Quartermaster Department, Depot Quartermaster.

Captain Elmer J. Wallace, Signal Corps, in charge of Signal Corps installation in the Artillery District of Honolulu.

Captain Eleutheros H. Cooke, Pay Department, Paymaster.

Captain Frank B. Edwards, Quartermaster Department, Constructing Quartermaster.

INFANTRYMAN EQUIPPED WITH FULL PACK READY FOR FIELD SERVICE

History of the Following Organizations:

Company G, Second Battalion United States Engineers.

Entire Fifth Regiment of Cavalry.

Second Battalion, First Field Artillery.

105th and 159th Coast Artillery Corps.

Second Battalion, Twentieth Regiment of Infantry.

First and Second Battalion of Second Infantry.

History of Company "G," Second Battalion of Engineers, U. S. A.

COMPANY "G" was organized March 14, 1901, at Fort Totten, Willets Point, New York. On June 17, 1901, the Company left Fort Totten, New York, en route to the Philippine Islands. Arrived in Manila Bay July 16, 1901. Disembarked July 18, 1901, and was assigned to quarters and station at Malate Barracks, Manila, P. I. The Company left Malate Barracks en route to Zamboango, Mindanao, P. I., for station August 31, 1901. Arrived at Zamboango September 4, 1901. While at Zamboango the Company was engaged on bridge and wharf building, surveying and reconnaissance, a reconnaissance map of Zamboango and adjacent country being made. The Company left Zamboango on May 15, 1902, en route to Malabang, Mindanao, P. I. Lieutenant Amos A. Fries and forty-five enlisted men remained at Zamboango, building a wharf. The Company arrived at Malabang on May 16, 1902. While at Malabang the Company was engaged on road and bridge building on the Malabang Lake Lanao military road, and also made all surveys and reconnaissance in connection with the road work.

The Company left Malabang on October 13, 1902, on the U. S. C. T. "Aeolus," en route to Illigan, Mindanao, P. I.; arrived at Zamboango on October 14, and picked up thirty men of the Zamboango detachment and proceeded to Illigan, arriving there on October 19, 1902. While at Illigan detachments were engaged on bridge and road work on the Illigan Lake Lanao road. A detachment constructed a wharf at Jolo Jolo, P. I.; another detachment constructed a wharf at Illigan, and another at Parang Parang, P. I.

On May 17, 1903, the Company was assembled at Malate Barracks, Manila, P. I., remaining there until June 6, 1903, on which date the entire Company embarked on the U. S. A. T. "Thomas" en route to the United States. Sailed from Manila June 8, 1903, and arrived at San Francisco, California, on July 10, 1903, disembarked and went into camp at the Presidio of San Francisco, California. Left San Francisco en route to Washington Barracks, D. C., for station July 17, 1903, arriving there on July 23, 1903. While at Washington Barracks the usual garrison duties were performed, annual target practice was held, and surveys and reconnaissance maps were made of the surrounding country.

On July 2, 1906, the Company left Washington, D. C., en route to camp of instruction to be established at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, arriving there the following day. During July the Company was engaged in laying out the camp sites, installing the water system for the entire camp and surveying and mapping the maneuver grounds. Left Chickamauga Park September 5, 1906, and marched to Catoosa Spring, Georgia, for target practice. Completed target practice and left Catoosa Springs twenty-three days later and marched to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia; entrained there and returned to Washington Barracks, D. C., which was reached on September 29.

On September 30, 1906, orders were received to proceed to New York City and embark on transport for Cuba. New York was left on October 2, arriving at Havana, Cuba, on October 6, and disembarking the next day. The Second Battalion of Engineers, which was the first organization of the Army to land on Cuban soil in the second Cuban intervention, proceeded to Camp Columbia, Cuba, a distance of about eight miles from Havana, established camp and took station there. From November 1, 1906, to March 31, 1908, various detachments of the Company were sent out mapping, surveying and doing reconnaissance work in different parts of the Island of Cuba, in the preparation of a map by the Engineer Department, Army of Cuban Pacification, of the entire Island of Cuba.

Two detachments of the Company, consisting of two officers and twenty-eight enlisted men, were on detached service at San Juan y Martinez and Guane, Province of Pinar del Rio, Cuba, from May 6, 1907, to January 16, 1909, engaged in the supervision of the construction of the San Juan y Martinez- Punta de Cartas and Guane Luis Lazo roads, under the Civil Government of Cuba.

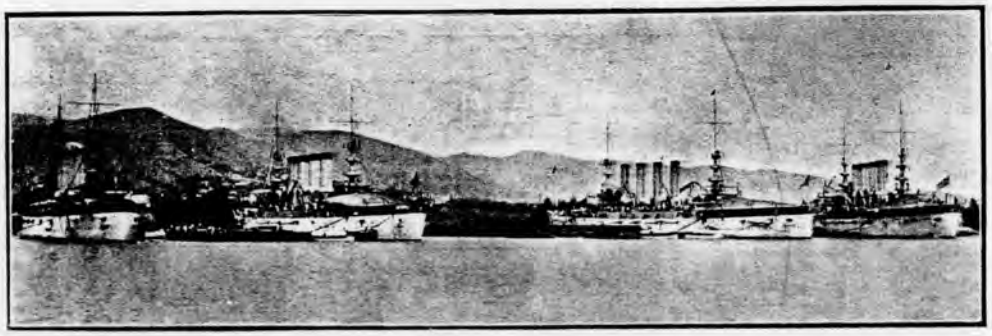
On the morning of March 31, 1909, the Company participated in the ceremonies preceding the evacuation of Cuba by the United States troops composing the Army of Cuban Pacification, and proceeded to Havana, where it embarked on the U. S. A. T. "McClellan" that afternoon. The ship sailed from Havana on April 1, 1909, and arrived in Hampton Roads, Virginia, on April 4, 1909, disembarking at Newport News, Virginia, and proceeding to Washington Barracks, D. C., where it arrived on April 6, 1909.

Left Washington Barracks, D. C., on April 28, 1909, for Honolulu, H. T. Arrived at San Francisco, California, and embarked on U. S. A. T. "Sheridan" May 4, arriving at Honolulu, H. T., on May 13, 1909, marching to Fort De Russy, Waikiki, H. T., distant three and a half miles from Honolulu, for station.

Since taking station at Fort De Russy, the Company has been engaged in making an instrumental survey of the entire Island of Oahu, H. T., the survey being in charge of Captain Alfred B. Putnam, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.

The Company is at present under orders to proceed on or about November 5, 1911, from Honolulu to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for station.

* The work accomplished on the Malabang Lake Lanao military road was done in connection with, and while the company was a unit of, the First Malabang-Lake Lanao expedition under the command of Colonel Baldwin, 27th U. S. Infantry, who was afterwards promoted Brigadier General.



History of the Fifth Cavalry, U. S. A.

[The Fifth United States Cavalry was organized by Act of Congress March 3, 1855, as the Second Regiment of Cavalry; designation changed by Act of August 3, 1861.]

PON THE ORGANIZATION OF THE REGIMENT, recruits were sent to Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, where the first drills were conducted by Major Hardee—the author of the tactics of that day—and the early discipline administered by such men as Johnston, Lee, and Thomas. Of the twenty officers who joined from the Regular Army—many having been appointed from civil life—sixteen obtained the grade of general officers during the Rebellion, and four commanded great armies in the field. In the fall of 1855, the regiment made the long overland march, through sparsely settled country, to Texas, where it patrolled a frontier extending from the Red River to Fort Brown on the Rio Grande; scouted far into New Mexico; fought in the Indian Territory, and defeated Mexican or Indian marauders in Old Mexico, and left the State of Texas five years later, with forty well-contested engagements, with Lipan, Apache, Kiowa or Comanche Indians and guerillas to be engraved on the ferrule of its standard.

During the Civil War, it was engaged before the first defeat and after the last triumph of the Federal forces. With Arnold's battery, a squadron covered the retreat at Bull Run. It assisted in stopping the last advance of Lee's army at Appomattox. On April 9, 1865, it completed the list of battles and minor actions. Commanded by captains and lieutenants, who frequently had served in its ranks shortly before, it performed some of its best service, this often when the arm was outnumbered and overworked. The Cavalry received little encouragement in the early part of the war, and with the rest of the Regular Army was under many disadvantages, its officers serving with volunteers and other important duties, leaving the "Commandant" a constantly changing individual. Still, there is recorded a brilliant dash at Fairfax; the capture of two companies of unbroken infantry by Harrison's troops at Hanover Court House; the deeds of Custer at New Bridge and McIntosh at Sycamore Church. At Gaines' Mill, in the evening after the last attack of the enemy, Captain Whiting, leading his 220 troopers of the Fifth, struck Longstreet's veterans squarely in front, and saved the guns from a brigade of Texans who had advanced within a hundred yards of their position. Whiting's horse was shot from under him, dropping him at the feet of the Fourth Texas Infantry; Chambliss was torn almost to pieces with six wounds; Sweet was killed. Only one officer was unwounded. But notwithstanding that fifty-eight men and twenty-four horses had been left on the field, the troopers re-formed and took up the task of covering the retreat of the Federal Army. Two days later the men were engaged at Savage Station.

On May 23rd and 24th—the month following that in which the regiment was engaged in its last fight of the War of the Rebellion—the Union Army of civilian soldiers, forming a column thirty miles long, with a rapidity that almost seems incredible, scattered and went back to the practice of their professions and avocations of civil life. The Fifth did not form part of this Civilian Army, and after some two years of reconstruction duty with small detachments, scattered over nearly every Southern State, the major portion went westward for duty against the Indians, who had become stirred up by the construction of transcontinental railroads through their hunting grounds in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado.

The troops proceeded to Fort Harker, Kansas, and then started on their fifteen years of Indian service in the Military Division of the Missouri, which included the territory extending from the British boundary on the north to the Mexican frontier on the south, and from Chicago on the east to the western boundaries of New Mexico, Utah and Montana, embracing ninety-nine tribes of Indians, and aggregating about 175,000 persons, who were scattered over an area of more than 1,000,000 square miles of frontier country.

On October 1, 1868, the troops under Major Royal took the field at Fort Harker on their maiden scout, and for over a year, by regiment, troop, and detachment, the men were in the saddle following the trail, hot and cold, from the Canadian River in Texas to the Niobrara in Nebraska. The main efforts of the troops were directed against Tall Bull of the Cheyennes, with whom were the Sioux of Pawnee Killer and Whistler, whose bands were finally located in July, 1869.

It was on July 11th that a large party of Sioux, Cheyennes and Dog soldiers was discovered by the scouts, on Summit Springs, a tributary of the South Platte in Colorado. In spite of having marched over swollen streams and heavy sand-hills for 300 miles, the men at once made the attack, and like devils of dust swept the intervening plain in one of the most superb charges ever made by them. Troop A turned the enemy's left; then dashing to the rear, killed seven warriors and captured 300 animals. But, unfortunately, Troop H, in the attempt to get around the right flank, encountered an ugly ravine, which put them out of the fight. The other troops that charged never stopped until they had passed through the village. After the fight, in this village of 84 lodges, were found forty-two dead warriors; fifteen squaws and children; 274 horses and ponies and forty-four mules. Two white women (captives) were in the camp, one of whom had a baby, which the squaws, even in their flight, had taken time to strangle. Both women had been shot by the Indians. One was killed outright; the other, who had been wounded in the breast, was taken to Fort Sedgewick, Colorado, and eventually recovered.

In these campaigns William F. Cody acted as chief guide and scout, and distinguished himself. For this battle the regiment received the congratulations of the various military commanders and the thanks of the Legislature of Nebraska. It ended the Indian terrorism in two States for many years. Up to this time the regiment had had five men killed and nine wounded, and had gained two Medals of Honor—one by an officer and the other by an enlisted man. In 1871, i. e., up to November, the men had ridden four thousand miles. In that month they were ordered to Arizona for service against the Apaches.

Concentrating at Fort McPherson, Nebraska, and Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming, the regiment moved to Oakland, California, and in December sailed to Yuma. The Apaches had become the scourge of the country. They made Sonora the field for their marauding expenditions. Many murders were committed; promising settlements were abandoned; mining industries paralyzed; and up to the time of the arrival of the regiment, the history of Arizona had been written with the blood of hundreds of American citizens.

During its service there from 1872 to 1875, there were 104 battles and engagements. The presence of a few troops encouraged small settlements, but outside of the half dozen large towns, life and property were never safe from the marauding savage, who, while fattening his squaw and papooses at the agencies, passed his time drinking tizwin, killing "greasers" and white men and running off their stock. These conditions continued until General Crook put the Indians on their reservations with the aid of the regiment. Officers and men worked day and night, and from the affairs participated in by the regiment over five hundred Indians were killed, and many hundreds captured. The killing of Lieutenant Reid T. Stewart at the first volley fired by the Indians from ambush in Davidson's Canyon; the torturing to death of his driver by lances and knives; the capturing of Corporal Black of Troop F, who had escaped the first volley; the all-night march of Troops G, L and M, led by the friendly Apache scout "Nantaje," to the caves in Salt River Canyon, terminating in the wiping out of a band of marauders with rifles and rocks, amid the wailing of women and children and the death song of the warriors, and the murder of Lieutenant Almy on May 27, 1873, at the San Carlos reservation, are but a few of the stirring incidents that took place.

The Indians also lost their rancherias and supplies, leaving them no place in which to seek safety except on their reservations. The troops were constantly in the field. They never relaxed their vigilance in the most trying circumstances, and eventually succeeded in outwitting and beating the wildest of foes, sustaining comparatively slight loss to themselves, until the closing of a war that had been waged since the day of Cortez. The Adjutant-General of the Division of the Pacific in his report stated: "The result of the good conduct of the troops, particularly the Fifth Cavalry, was really of national consequence," while the Commanding General wrote: "For the extraordinary services they have rendered in the late campaign against the Apaches, the Division Commander extends his thanks and congratulations upon their brilliant success. They have merited the gratitude of the nation. There now is occasion for hope that the well-deserved chastisement inflicted upon the Apaches may give peace to the people of Arizona."

Then came an overland march to Kansas in 1875, and a brief service there, which, though fairly active, afforded no serious work until the Sioux war in 1876. In June of that year the troops were recalled from the field and loaned to the Department of the Platte for field service against the northern Sioux and other disaffected bands under Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse, who were in a state of war. Then followed the killing of Yellow Hand by Scout Cody; the march to Goose Creek; the forming and service of the Yellowstone Expedition; the march from Heart River of 1,400 Cavalry and 600 Infantry to the Black Hills of Dakota, subsisting principally upon their horses, which were shot and issued as meat; the surrounding of Red Lief's village on the Chadron River by Troops H and L, who captured fifty warriors, forty lodges and 350 horses and ponies without firing a shot; service in Idaho after Bannocks; in the Sand Hills of Nebraska after Cheyennes; on the Stinking River trying a last blow at the Nez Perces; along the flanks of the Big Horns; patrolling the hunting grounds of the Sioux; and at Omaha and Chicago during the railway riots in the winter of 1879.

In October of that year, Troops D and F were besieged on Milk Creek with Major Thornburgh's command, about 160 miles from Rawlins, Wyoming. One-third of the command had been killed or injured, and among the latter was the only surgeon. General Merritt led the rest of the regiment from Rawlins to Milk Creek and raised the siege, thus terminating the Indian campaigns. Then followed years of peace, during which the regiment was engaged in enforcing laws in the Indian country.

In 1893 the Regiment was again back in Texas, leaving in 1898 to engage a second time in a national war. The troops concentrated at New Orleans, to form a part of a provisional brigade under Brigadier General Snyder. On May 24th, it proceeded to Mobile, Alabama, and served with a part of a brigade of the Fourth Army Corps. That camp was left on June 4th of the same year for Tampa, Florida, arriving there on the 7th. In July the rainy season set in, and as the palmetto flats were converted into swamps, the camps had to be abandoned, the Regiment moving to Tampa Heights with nearly three hundred men on the sick report. In this fever-stricken camp, three hundred and ninety-five recruits and five hundred horses were received, and Troops L and M were reorganized.

On August 15th the Regiment, with the exception of Troop A, which had left for Porto Rico on July 24th, departed, en route to Huntsville, Alabama, from which place headquarters and six troops proceeded on November 4th to Savannah, Georgia, sailing for Porto Rico, followed by the remainder of the Regiment in January, 1899. By the middle of the summer of 1899 order had been restored, leaving the small army remaining on the island apparently nothing to do.

The inhabitants welcomed the Americans, for they had foreseen in the train of the army American markets, self-government and wealth. The transfer of sovereignty had left the island without a supreme court, but with eleven jails and one penitentiary with three thousand inmates. A provisional court was installed, and Majors Dimmick and Thomas were appointed associate judges, while enlisted men were attached as deputy marshals, etc. The courts were enjoined to clear their dockets, and the number of prisoners was reduced from three thousand to nine hundred, while the jails were cut from eleven to five.

August 9, 1899, found the island suffering from the disastrous effects of the hurricane and flood of the previous day, when nearly three thousand people were lost and a million dollars worth of property was destroyed, including the greater part of the food supply, such as bananas and plantains, thus threatening thousands with starvation.

Of the population of 950,000, probably 750,000 belonged to the peon class.

Officers, non-commissioned officers and privates were immediately sent out to ascertain the extent of the damage, and of the twelve inspection divisions the Regiment was represented in ten, eight being commanded by its officers. The period was between the war and the time when Congress would provide for a civil government, and it was fortunate that the soldiers held the reins at a moment when quick and decisive action was necessary. The municipal authorities were incapable of giving any aid, so the military government appealed to the people of the United States for assistance to prevent actual starvation. Pending a response, steps were taken to alleviate the immediate suffering, and the Board of Charities was organized to manage all funds and supplies for relief purposes. The simplest rations, such as rice, beans, codfish and bacon had been received; also a large quantity of new and old clothing, which was turned over to the Women's Aid Society of San Juan, thereby enabling them to give nearly a thousand dresses every week to clothe the poor.

The service in Porto Rico was arduous, and much was done outside of the regular routine; but the Regiment at work was not neglected; and that the result was highly satisfactory was shown by the following extract from a letter by Charles Louis Donahue, dated December 16, 1900, commenting on the condition of the troops after the return of the Regiment to the United States:

"The parade of the Regiment from the White House to the Capitol was distinguished less for holiday pageantry than for its thrilling display of power. They are the same stolid men of war in holiday dress that they are in the heavy trappings of marching order for the front. I have seen them embarking for the insular campaigns, for the strife among the godless hordes of China, and I have witnessed their return to participate in the pompous spectacles of public rejoicing, and that air of almost dogged sullenness has never been wanting. This is true of the Cavalry arm as it is of the Infantry. A finer body of men than the Fifth Cavalry escort to the President on centennial day was never mounted."

After a short tour of duty at Fort Myer, Virginia, the Regiment, in the spring of 1901, sailed for the Philippine Islands, where it was engaged in work incident to that time on the Island of Luzon. It guarded the watersheds of the water supply of the city of Manila during the cholera epidemic, patrolling the Maraquina River from the caves at Montalbon to the intake at El Deposito, and later pitched its camp in grass that was shoulde- high, where it commenced construction work on the site of what is now Camp Stotsenburg.

Upon return to the United States, in 1903, its troops were scattered through Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona, until the winter of 1909, when it proceeded to the Island of Oahu, Hawaii Territory, taking station at Schofield Barracks.

History of Light Battery "D" 5th Artillery; 9th Battery Field Artillery; Battery "F" 1st Field Artillery.

HAT is now Battery "F," First Field Artillery, was originally the Cadet Battery at West Point, and was organized and equipped for actual service in the Civil War, during the early part of 1861. Orders No. 3, Headquarters U. S. Military Academy, January 7, 1861, directed Lieutenant Griffin, Tactical Department, to form a light battery of four pieces, with six horses to the piece. Enough men to make the command seventy strong were transferred from the Dragoon and Artillery Detachments. On January 31, 1861, the command left West Point for Washington, where it remained as an independent battery until May 4, 1861. On this day the Battery was attached to the Fifth Regiment of Artillery, in conformity with a proclamation of the President, with station at Washington.

On July 4, 1861, the Battery was designated as Light Battery "D," Fifth Artillery. Congress confirmed this act on July 12, 1861 (approved July 29, 1861), but all appointments dated from May 14, 1861. It was equipped at the start as a Field Battery, both as regards the personnel and its equipments. Captain Griffin, who had been promoted and transferred to the Fifth, retained command of the Battery he had formed.

This same day, July 4, 1861, the Battery proceeded to Arlington, thence by short marches to Fairfax and the battlefield of Bull Run, where it found itself posted opposite the enemy's left. There it aided in silencing the opposing batteries and caused the enemy's lines to fall back, pursued by our Infantry. Later in the afternoon it advanced in the first attack to a position previously occupied by the Confederates, when it was suddenly charged from an adjoining wood by a body of Infantry and Cavalry, supposed, at first, to be Federals. The supports, raw troops, gave way; every cannoneer was cut down, and a large number of horses killed, notwithstanding the efforts of the officers to rally the support, and most of the guns were captured. The Battery lost during the day twenty-seven men, killed and wounded, out of an effective ninety-five, and fifty-five horses.

At Camp Greble, near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the Battery was reorganized, recruited and resupplied, the State of Pennsylvania furnishing most of the recruits.

Withdrawn from the field October 16, 1865, and took station at Fort Jefferson, Dry Tortugas, Florida, arriving November 11, 1865. In accordance with Act of Congress, the name of the Battery was changed from Battery "D," Fifth Artillery, to Ninth Battery, Feld Artillery, by G. O. No. 15, W. D., February 13, 1901. In accordance with Act of Congress, the name of the Battery was changed from Ninth Battery, Field Artillery, to Battery "F," First Field Artillery, by G. O. No. 118, War Department, May 31, 1907.

From April 18 to August 20, 1906, the Battery assisted in the relief work in the city of San Francisco, California, as a result of the earthquake and fire. The Battery arrived in the Hawaiian Islands on November 15, 1910, and took station at Schofield Barracks, H. T. On May 27, 1911, the Battery marched to Ewa Plantation, via Kole Kole Pass, being the first Battery to march through the pass.

History of the 105th Company, Coast Artillery Corps.

HE HISTORY of the One Hundred and Fifth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, dates from the passage by Congress of "An Act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," which was approved on February 2, 1901, and was published in General Orders No. 9, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, on February 6, 1901. Under the provisions of this order the regimental organization of the Artillery arm was discontinued and that arm was designated as the Artillery Corps, with two branches,—namely, the Coast Artillery and the Field Artillery. One hundred and twenty-six companies and ten bands of Coast Artillery were provided for. A proviso stipulated that the increase should be made as follows: "Not less than twenty per cent. before July 1, 1901, and not less than twenty per cent. each succeeding twelve months until the total number provided for shall have been attained."

In conformity with the provisions of the Act, General Order No. 15, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's office, Washington, February 13, 1901, was issued. This order, after a recital of the change of organization of the Artillery arm, published the new designation of the Battery of Field Artillery and Companies of Coast Artillery. Among the changes was Battery "G," Third Artillery, which was designated the Twenty-ninth Company, Coast Artillery. The new designations of eighty-two companies of Coast Artillery were published in this order. Subsequently, the Eighty-third to Ninty-fourth Companies, Coast Artillery, were organized, pursuant to General Order No. 25, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, February 28, 1901. Pursuant to General Order No. 78, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, June 6, 1901, the Ninety-fifth to Ninety-seventh Companies, inclusive, Coast Artillery, were organized, and the Ninety-eighth to the One Hundred and Sixth Companies, inclusive, Coast Artillery, were authorized in General Order No. 10, dated August 2, 1901, which related, in part, to the One Hundred and Fifth Company.

The One Hundred and Fifth was stationed at the Presidio of San Francisco, California, under Captain Louis R. Burgus. The following transfer was made: Presidio of San Francisco, from the Twenty-ninth Company to the One Hundred and Fifth Company. The service of the Company throughout the year was at Battery Howe.

On April 18, 1906, the memorable earthquake and fire which destroyed San Francisco, occurred. The One Hundred and Fifth Company was, at this time, occupying brick barracks on the Post. The structure was not seriously damaged, but several men of the Company were injured, but none dangerously. The One Hundred and Fifth Company, in conjunction with other organizations of the Post, was detailed for duty in the city, where it remained until May 3, and then returned to the Presidio of San Francisco, California. General Order No. 42 had the following interesting remarks to make on July 2, 1906:—

"Since the troops and detailed officers, which conditions of the earthquake and fire brought into San Francisco, are now gradually returning to their normal stations and duties, the Division Commander takes this opportunity to express his appreciation of the character and value of their services.

"It is to be remarked that these duties brought together the largest force of Army and Navy ever engaged in a non-military service under the American flag. It thus follows that as this command represents typically the military forces of the Nation, its conduct and bearing are of unusual interest.

"On this duty have been employed two General Officers, the First and Fourteenth Cavalry, the Tenth, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-eighth, Sixtieth, Sixty-first, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, Sixty-eighth, Seventieth, and One Hundred and Fifth Companies of the Coast Artillery; First, Ninth, and Twenty-fourth Batteries of Field Artillery, the Eleventh Battalion of Field Artillery, (Seventeenth and Eighteenth Mountain Batteries), Tenth, Eleventh, Fourteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-second Infantry, Companies "C" and "D" of the Corps of Engineers; Companies "A" and "B" of the Hospital Corps; Companies "A," "E" and "H" of the Signal Corps; one hundred and thirty staff and detailed officers. among whom were selected representatives of every Corps of the Army, including volunteers from the retired list. To these were added a command of blue jackets, a battalion of Marines, and a force of Naval Apprentices.

"The work done falls readily into two phases—the struggle to save San Francisco from complete destruction by fire, and the succoring of more than 300,000 suffering and destitute people. The heroic efforts of the Army in the heart of the city under Brigadier-General Frederick Funstan, temporarily commanding the division, happily supplemented by the labors of the Navy under Admiral C. F. Goodrich along the waterfront, saved the residential western district and practically all the wharves fronting the bay. The effort of this command from daybreak of April 18th to midnight of April 20th taxed to the utmost the physical strength, the nervous energy, and the good temper of every officer and man. Yet in this fearful disaster, with its accompanying confusion and excitement, no life was taken by any man of the Army and Navy. The work and its accompaniments were dramatic in the extreme.

"The duty necessitated the feeding of nearly 350,000 people (313,117 were fed on May 13th), destitute in one way or another, in a city without local transportation, without food, with scant water, without sanitary facilities, and forced to cook all food on the public streets. * * *

"It likewise involved repression of theft and violence by the vicious, now interference with the liberty and acts of the ordinary citizens, discrimination in the distribution of food, enforcement of suitable sanitary methods, instruction in tent life, patient consideration, courteous deportment toward the homeless and destitute. Moreover, co-operation was demanded with independent bodies, the State Guard, the Municipal Police, and the Health Commissioners.

"The Division Commander learns with extreme satisfaction that the personal behavior and performance of duty of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps have elicited general satisfaction and unstinted praise, especially from the Governor of California, the Mayor of San Francisco, the Federal Officials, the Citizens' Committee, and City Press.

"The Division Commander commends the adaptability and resourcefulness shown by officers and men in dealing with novel and unprecedented conditions, their consideration and thoughtfulness in alleviating distress, their unvarying courtesy to all, and their uncomplaining devotion to the community and its interests.

"The service has exemplified the admirable attributes of the American Army officer and men, which ensure the successful application of its moral, intellectual and physical powers to novel and difficult duties.

"The record of this command in San Francisco must reflect high credit on the Army as a whole, indicating, as it does, that the soldier of the twentieth century worthily upholds in time of peril the honor of the Nation.

"By Command of Major-General Greely.

"H. G. HAASE,

"Captain, General Staff, Acting Chief of Staff.

"Official.

"S. W. DEMMING,

"Military Secretary."

The Company changed station in compliance with General Order No. 108, War Department, 1909, from Presidio of San Francisco, California, to Honolulu, H. T. It sailed on the U. S. A. T. "Sheridan" on August 5, 1909, and arrived at Honolulu on August 12, taking station at Fort Ruger, H. T., having been assigned to Battery Harlow on the same date. The Company has performed garrison duty ever since.

History of the 159th Company, Coast Artillery Corps.

THE One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, was organized on September 1, 1907, and was quartered in the rear of Battery Lancaster with the Sixty-sixth Company, C. A. C., from that date until November 1, 1907, when it moved into quarters in the Presidio, San Francisco, California, with the Sixty-sixth Company, where it remained until June 16, 1908. On the latter date it was transferred again with the Sitxy-sixth Company to Fort Barry, California, and they occupied quarters jointly until October 1, 1908. The One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Company was assigned to Battery Alexander on June 16, 1908, and went into camp in rear of Battery Alexander on October 1, where it remained until November 21 of that year.

On the date named it was transferred to the Presidio of San Francisco, California, and took up quarters in wooden barracks in West Cantonment. On December 18, of the same year, it was assigned to Battery Howe.

First Lieutenant William E. De Sombre was temporarily in command from September 1, 1907, until September 16, 1907.

First Lieutenant William S. Bowen was temporarily in command from October 2, 1907, until October 19, 1907.

First Lieutenant Chester H. Loop was assigned to Company September 1, 1907; transferred to the Twenty-fifth Company, Coast Artillery Corps, in November, 1908, but he never joined the Company.

First Lieutenant Clarence A. Mitchell was temporarily in command from October 19, 1908, until November 16, 1908.

Second Lieutenant Harry R. Vaughan, Coast Artillery Corps, was assigned to Company, and was in command from November 16, 1908, until November 19, 1908.

First Lieutenant George E. Turner was transferred to this Company and took permanent command on November 19, 1908, and was relieved on June 27, 1911.

Captain Harry P. Wilbur, Coast Artillery Corps, took command on June 27, 1911.

The Artillery District of Honolulu was established pursuant to General Orders, No. 74, War Department, April 24, 1909. The same order named the Forts that were to comprise the District, viz., Fort Ruger (headquarters), Fort De Russy, Fort Armstrong, and Fort Upton. Later War Department Orders changed the name of the reservation at Pearl Harbor from Fort Upton to Fort Kamehameha, in honor of Kamehameha I, the first king of the Hawaiian Islands.

Major John K. Cree, C. A. C., was the first to command the Artillery District and was in command from August 12, 1909, to March 7, 1910. Major Edward J. Timberlake, C. A. C., relieved Major Cree and assumed command of the Artillery District on March 14, 1910, and is at present in command. The only post at present garrisoned by troops is Fort Ruger.

Fort Ruger was first garrisoned August 14, 1909, by the One Hundred and Fifth and One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Companies, C. A. C., under command of Major John K. Cree, C. A. C. These two Companies arrived at Honolulu August 12, 1909, from the Presidio of San Francisco, California, where they had previously been stationed. The following officers accompanied the command for duty at the post: Major John K. Cree, C. A. C., commanding; Captain Harry P. Wilbur, C. A. C., District and Post Q. M., O. O. and Arty. Engr.; First Lieutenant Wm. H. Smith, Medical Corps, Surgeon; Captain James R. Pourie, C. A. C., commanding 105th Co., C. A. C.; First Lieutenant John S. Williams, C. A. C., duty with 105th Co., C. A. C.; First Lieutenant George E. Turner, C. A. C., commanding 159th Co., C. A. C.; Second Lieutenant Harry R. Vaughan, C. A. C., duty with 159th Co., C. A. C., Post and Acting District Adjutant.

The two Companies of Coast Artillery Corps and the Detachment of Hospital Corps were camped in tents in the quadrangle in rear of the mortar battery. After much hard labor on the part of these troops, planting lawns, building roads, etc., they have transformed a barren tract of lava rock into one of the most beautiful camps around Honolulu.

Construction work on the new post was commenced on April 1, 1911. It is expected that the end of the present year will see the officers and the two companies in the new quarters and barracks, now under way.

The following officers are at present on duty at Fort Ruger: Major Edward J. Timberlake, C. A. C., Commanding Post and District; Captain Charles A. Clark, C. A. C., Q. M. and Comsy.; First Lieutenant John S. Pratt, C. A. C.; First Lieutenant Joseph L. Sanford, Medical Reserve Corps, Surgeon; Captain Harry P. Wilbur, C. A. C., commanding 159th Co., C. A. C., District and Post O. O. and Arty. Engr.; First Lieutenant Harry R. Vaughan, C. A. C., duty with 159th Co., C. A. C., Post and Acting District Adjutant; Captain John S. Johnston, C. A. C., commanding 105th Co., C. A. C.; Second Lieutenant Frederick A. Price, C. A. C., duty with 105th Co., C. A. C.

History of the Second Battalion Twentieth Regiment of Infantry.

THE TWENTIETH INFANTRY was organized by direction of the President on May 4, 1861, and confirmed by Act of Congress on July 29, 1861, as the Second Battalion of the Eleventh Infantry, the first numerically, of the nine three-battalion regiments organized under this Act. Its designation was changed by Act of Congress on July 28, 1866, when, by the addition of two companies to the eight which constituted the battalion, it became the Twentieth Infantry. Its designation and organization were completed and fixed under the Act, by the provisions of General Order No. 92, from the War Department, series of 1866, and was of effect from September 21, 1866.

While as an organization perfected at this date, the Twentieth Infantry can have no distinct war record, its officers (with hardly an exception) and a great number of enlisted men whose names appear on its original rolls, with many officers who have subsequently joined by promotion and otherwise, had served during the entire War of the Rebellion, with marked and distinguished gallantry, in such important and conspicuous positions that their military record had become a part of the Nation's history.

At the time of this development of the Battalion into a Regiment (1866), it was, with the exception of Company "B" (then at Union, West Virginia), stationed at Richmond, Virginia. As a part of the Eleventh Infantry, it had remained there from early in May, 1865, occupying the temporary, but very comfortable (to troops that had endured four years of field service in actual warfare), location and buildings then known as Camp Winder, later Camp Grant.

In January, 1867, the Regiment was transferred from Richmond to the Department of the Gulf and District of Louisiana, with headquarters at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where it arrived on February 1, 1867, having remained for a few days in New Orleans, from which point the companies were assigned to posts and stations.

The journey by which the Regiment reached its new station in the Department of the Gulf, then commanded by General Sheridan, was performed by rail to Norfolk, Virginia, where it arrived about midnight on January 13. Its commander was notified that the Regiment would embark at once on board the S. S. Missouri, and on the 15th, with headquarters and nine companies ("B" not having joined) aboard, the band playing and colors flying, the Missouri steamed out past Fort Monroe. In a few hours it was blowing a terrible gale, accompanied by rain and hail. The ship proved less seaworthy than she had appeared to the board convened for inspection, and soon became disabled through the breakage of some of her machinery. She sprang a leak also. After the storm of four days' duration had somewhat abated, the commanding officer was informed of the condition of affairs, and that the ship was a long way off her course. The leakage and damage to machinery proved less serious than was at first supposed. With but a day's delay repairs were effected, and the ship proceeded on her voyage to the southwest pass of the delta of the Mississippi, and there stuck in the mud. A steamer of the Morgan Line was procured. The troops and baggage were transferred, and after a delightful sail up the Mississippi, New Orleans was reached on January 27, 1867.

During the next two years the Regiment was employed on duties connected with the reconstruction of the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, with frequent changes of station of companies within the District and Department.

By General Orders No. 17, A. G. O., March 15, 1869, the Regiment was transferred to the Department of Dakota, and in compliance with this order its companies, then widely scattered over the State of Louisiana, assembled at Baton Rouge. On April 4th, the entire Regiment, under command of its colonel, embarked on the steamer for St. Paul, Minnesota, where it arrived on April 20th.

The stations assigned the Regiment at that date were among the most isolated and inaccessible in the country. They were located on or near the reservations on which the savage bands of Sioux roamed, or were maintained, and in addition to the probable restraining influence they had upon the Indians, served as safeguards to the thousand hardy settlers who, with the advent of railways, have made the Dakotas the populous States of today.

In 1874, Company "I" was attached to and formed a part of the command of General Custer, for the exploration of the Black Hills country. Other companies had frequent but less extended tours of detached duty, on expeditions of minor importance.

The Regiment served in the Department of Texas from 1878 to 1881; in the Department of Missouri from 1881 to 1885; in the Department of Dakota from 1885 to 1894; and in the Department of Missouri from 1894 to 1898.

The Regiment left Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, on April 19, 1898, in compliance with telegraphic instructions from the A. G. O., and proceeded, by rail, to Mobile, Alabama, arriving there two days later. It remained in camp until June 4th, being assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, Fourth Army Corps.

On June 4th the Regiment, fully equipped for field service, sailed from Mobile, on the transport Mattewan, constituting, with the Third U. S. Infantry, an independent brigade, attached to the Fifth Army Corps, and commanded by Brigadier-General John C. Bates, U. S. Volunteers, Colonel Second U. S. Infantry. The Regiment joined the Fifth Army Corps at Tampa, Florida, June 6th, and sailed with it to Cuba on June 14th, disembarking at Daiquiri on June 22nd. The next day it marched toward Siboney, which was reached on the 24th, and remained in camp, making roads, reconnaissances, etc., until June 30th.

The effective strength of the Regiment at the beginning of the first day's fight, July 1st, was twenty-three officers and 570 enlisted men. On June 30th, the First Battalion was on duty repairing roads from about 3:30 a. m. to 8:30 p. m. The Regiment left Siboney at 8:30 p. m., and proceeded to El Caney, where General Lawton's Division was engaged with the enemy, who occupied the town and a stone block house at the outskirts of the town. The Regiment was placed in two lines, along a sunken road, about 400 yards in front of the stone house referred to above.

The First Battalion was moved to the right and put into action on the Twenty-fifth Infantry firing line, and one Company ("A") took part in the latter part of the charge by which the block house was taken. The Regiment was in action and under fire for one and one-half hours, and had one man killed and eight wounded.

As soon as the Spanish had been driven from El Caney, the Regiment marched back about two miles, cooked supper, and rested until 9:00 p. m., when the march to Santiago was taken up. San Juan was reached about 2:30 a. m., and the Regiment bivouaced on the reverse slope of a hill confronting the Spanish lines. Firing began at daylight, and many random shots fell into the camp.

At about noon on July 2nd, the regiment moved out of bivouac and took up a position on the left of the line, with the Second Infantry on its right. Seven men were wounded while the Regiment was in bivouac and moving into position.

The Regiment formed a new line along a sunken road on the extreme left, where it entrenched itself, making numerous traverses, as protection against the enfilading fire, to which it was subjected.

On July 7th, the Regiment moved to a new position on the heights overlooking the Spanish works in front of Santiago, where it entrenched, the nearest point being about 600 yards from the Spanish lines. The Second Infantry was next on the right and the Third Infantry on the left. On July 10th, at 4 p. m., fire was opened along the line upon the Spanish works. The fire of the Regiment was strong and accurate enough to silence one gun and keep down the fire from the Spanish works in its front. Firing by sharpshooters was begun again at daybreak on the 11th, and continued until ordered stopped during the truce.

The Regiment sustained the reputation of the Army for fortitude, intelligent performance of duty, and ability to endure under privations. The members were cool under fire or in the charge, were under perfect discipline at all times, and showed remarkable ingenuity in the construction of entrenchments, the lines of which were mainly built with bayonets, meat cans or tin cups. The line of these entrenchments was selected by the company officers, without the assistance of the engineer officers, and were models of construction. The conduct of all the officers and enlisted men during the whole campaign and while in action was that of veterans.

The Regiment continued in the trenches last mentioned until the capitulation on July 17th, when it was withdrawn and camped on a hill overlooking the city of Santiago, being made part of the First Brigade, Third Division, Fifth Army Corps, and was occupied in guarding Spanish prisoners until its departure for the United States on August 18th, being one of the last Regiments to leave the islands.

On August 18, 1898, the Regiment sailed for Montauk Point, New York, where it went into Camp on August 26th. On September 13th, it left Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, and proceeded to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where it arrived on September 16, 1898.

By Act of Congress, approved on April 26, 1898, it was provided by Section 2 of the Act, that upon a declaration of war by Congress, the President might establish a third Battalion for each Infantry Regiment, consisting of four companies, to be supplied by manning two skeleton companies and by organizing two additional companies. The uniform war strength of a Company was fixed at 106 enlisted men and three officers.

Orders were received while the Regiment was at Mobile, Alabama, to take immediate steps to organize the new Battalion by transferring a certain number of men from the eight old companies (then only 65 strong) to the four new ones. On the eve of battle, officers were sent on recruiting service, and thus prevented from getting even a taste of war, for which they had spent nearly twenty years of study and work. A small fighting machine in perfect order was to be taken apart and ruined in an effort to constitute a larger and more perfect one. Fortunately war came on so quickly that the old companies retained their men, and the Regiment went through the Cuban Campaign with only eight companies. However, recruits arrived at Santiago, making it

History of the First and Second Battalions of Second Infantry.

THE REGIMENT was organized under Act of March 3, 1791, the date of the original commissions being March 4 of the same year. On September 4, 1792, the Second Infantry became the Second Sub-Legion, and so continued until November 1, 1796, when it reverted to its former designation. On May 17, 1815, under Act of March 3rd, of the same year, sweeping reductions in the number of Regiments and in the commissioned and enlisted force of the Army, caused the consolidation of the Regiment with the Third, Seventh, and Forty-fourth, to reform the First Infantry. By the same Act the Sixth, Sixteenth, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, and Thirty-second were consolidated to reform the Second Infantry. These double transfers were simultaneous, and while the officers and enlisted men transferred were entitled to their individual records wherever serving, the record of the official Second Infantry was, and continued to be, the record of all Regimental Organizations which had, consecutively and without lapse as to time, borne and been entitled to that designation.

On April 17, 1869, under Act of March 3, of that year, the Sixteenth Infantry, organized at the beginning of the Civil War, was merged into the Second.

There has been a disposition on the part of some of the Regimental historians to claim for their organization the history of the Regiments later merged into it. But, as previously outlined, while the officers are entitled to bring with them into their new Regiment their individual records, a Regiment itself is believed to be entitled only to history achieved under its own designation. In these tabulations, no account is taken of the War of 1812, records of the Regiments which later became the Second, nor of the Civil War record of the Sixteenth Infantry.

possible to organize Company "I" on July 12, 1898. Companies "K," "L," and "M" were organized at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, September 20, 1898.

Pursuant to General Orders No. 21, Headquarters Department of the Missouri, dated December 10, 1898, the Regiment left Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, by rail, arriving at San Francisco, California, and boarded the U. S. A. T. "Scandia," and sailed on January 26, 1899, for the Philippine Islands. Honolulu was the first port of call, and a stop of two days was made. The "Scandia" arrived in Manila Bay February 23rd.

When the Regiment left San Francisco, it was moving under orders that directed it to go prepared for a long tour of foreign garrison service. Upon arriving in Manila it was learned that an insurrection had broken out on February 4th, and the Regiment found itself in the midst of an active campaign.

The Regiment participated actively during the Pasig Campaign, from March 12 to March 17, 1899, sustaining a number of casualties, and garrisoned numerous small towns during the balance of the year. It also performed the arduous duties of Provost Guard in Manila during 1899-1900.

During the latter part of January, 1901, the Regiment was relieved from duty in Manila and ordered to duty in the First District, Northern Luzon, where it remained until July 1, 1901, when it sailed and took station in Batangas and Laguna Provinces, performing numerous expeditions against insurrectos and small bands of banditti which obtained at that time.

In the latter part of January, 1902, orders were received directing the Regiment to proceed to Manila, preparatory to changing station to the United States. It left Manila on February 15th, per U. S. A. T. "Sheridan," arriving at San Francisco, California, on March 12, 1902. The Second Battalion left San Francisco on April 4th, by rail, and proceeded to Columbus Barracks, Ohio, for station. The First and Third Battalions left San Francisco on March 18th, by rail, for Fort Sheridan, Illinois, where they arrived on March 23rd, and took station.

The Regiment remained in the Department of the Lakes until its departure for the Philippine Islands again in November, 1903. On December 1, 1903, the Regiment embarked on the U. S. A. T. "Logan" at San Francisco, and sailed for Manila, arriving there on December 28, 1903; served in the Philippines Division till March, 1906, at widely-separated stations, and was never at any time together until ordered back to the United States, which was reached in April, 1906.

The First and Third Battalions took station at Monterey, California, where they remained until June, 1909, when they were again ordered to the Philippines, and have remained there ever since. The Second Battalion (here represented) was stationed at Monterey for a period of fifteen months, when it was ordered to proceed for station at Honolulu, Hawaii, where it has been since June 23, 1907.
